What can I say. I wasn't expecting much at all And as I doubtfully walked towards the coach, I honestly thought to myself: Why would I want to do this ? But Really, My opinion has changed.

Beginning our journey from Hordle church, We were greeted and welcomed by the other members of the association, all of which were so kind and sympathetic. Due to being a child, I am still thoroughly grateful for all the other youths sitting at the back. To be honest I would have got bored if it weren't for them. You see when you meet everyone else, its honestly genuine: the people are all easy to connect to and down to earth.

On arrival at the ferry terminal, We popped off to the shop for all those people who had forgotten one thing or another. After a short wait in the coach, our boarding passes came round whilst our passports were collected. What had seemed like only moments later, we boarded the ferry and it was a world of adventures.

Adjacent to several dozen tables with comfy chairs, the wind whistled a sweet melody of lulling waves and soothing seas. Decorated with crimson strawberries and silky chocolate ganache, irresistible cream tarts dragged me toward the onboard diner. As we swayed slowly in the calm sea, I dozed off in my luxurious cabin of sweet dreams and soft alabaster clouds.

Following the journey from Caen was my biggest doubt ,the family. But they put me wrong straight away. Upon arrival to their humble home, we were given a warm welcome and put to bed.

Waking up, we were given a delicious boulangerie breakfast and rushed off to the coach-in which we were driven off to the benedictine museum.

To my disappointment, under 18s were not allowed to try the benedictine. But I still thoroughly enjoyed seeing the history and herbs behind such a strong drink. We even saw the distillery and brewery.

Later, we were driven to a spectacular museum of Chocolate. It was torture ! The sweet scent of heaven meandered through the room. Teasing my taste buds. I learnt several facts about the sweet treat and How it is made. I was even given the opportunity to buy some of heavens chocolate.

That evening, We all gathered at the centre for a delish buffet and we all had a raffle and a memory video. The following day, Our family took us to a restaurant.
